Over the last decade the Athabasca Region has received a substantial number of progressive upgrades to the regional municipal drinking water treatment system. In this presentation, an Operations Staff member of the Aspen Regional Water Services Commission (ARWSC) will review what has changed and discuss how the local regional municipal drinking water treatment process works today. After the presentation, the ARWSC staff will have some of the analytical instruments used in the day to day testing of municipal water onsite and will test some of the typical parameters for safe water.
