Robert Dale Rogers has been studying medicinal plants for over 40 years. His academic background includes a science degree in botany from the University of Alberta; and professional membership in the American Herbalist Guild. He teaches herbal medicine at Grant MacEwan and The Northern Star College of Mystical Studies. He has wild crafted, owned an herbal nursery, and until 2001 operated with his wife, Laurie, the most complete herbal, flower essence and aromatherapy store in Alberta. Robert is past chairman of the Alberta Natural Health Agricultural Network, and the Capital Health Community Health Council. He is principal owner of Earth Medicine Consulting, program director of the Alberta Mycological Society and on the board of directors of the Western Canadian Functional Food and Natural Health Product Network. Robert is retired from 18 years of clinical herbal practice in Edmonton, but continues to enjoy writing, lecturing, and industry consulting.
